An account of a remarkable book, compoſed by the late Marquis d'Argenſon, miniſter of ſtate, and yet unpubliſhed.

M. Rouſſeau, in his Social Contract, often mentions with applauſe a manuſcript, written by the late Marquis d'Argenſon, and entitled, Conſiderations ſur le gouvernement ancien et preſent de la France. We have got a ſight of this production, and we are informed it is ſoon to appear in public. The principal part of it is, A plan of internal government and policy, which this learned and judicious ſtateſman propoſed to introduce in the place of that which actually ſubſiſts in France. This plan is a wiſe, compleat excellent ſyſtem of legiſlation, founded upon democratical principles, and yet, in no wiſe detrimental to the authority of the monarch, though it tends to clip the wings of the nobility. The other part of this production relates to the intereſts of France, conſidered with regard to its foreign connexions. This part is ſuperficial and defective. It was compoſed, not only before the late war, which caſt ſuch an eclipſe over the luſtre of the French nation, and the univerſal monarch, but alſo before that unnatural change in the ſyſtem of Europe, that connected the houſe of Auſtria with the houſe of Bourbon, and engendered that rickety production called the Family Compact. By many paſſages of this performance it appears, that the Marquis d'Argenſon was no friend to ſuch confederacies; he, however, always ſeems elated with a frothy notion of the grandeur of the French monarchy, and its ſuperiority over all other powers. We ſhall here give a ſingular piece, that concludes this book, as it ſhews the true and uniform ſpirit of the French miniſtry, which never changes, but always aims at the ſame ambitious ends, though by different means and different inſtruments. And it is remarkable that even in the following piece, which has in view a moſt deſirable object, namely, univerſal peace, and is compoſed by a humane and pacific miniſter, ambition loſes nothing of its pretenſions; for according to this plan of pacification, Europe muſt owe its tranquility to the influence and commands of the French monarch. The piece is as follows:

Plan of a general pacification in Europe, by the means of a Supreme and Univerſal Tribunal, of which FRANCE ALONE is to exerciſe the Authority.

THE memory of Lewis XII. and that of Henry IV. will ever be dear to the French nation. The name of the latter, more eſpecially will live for ever, on account both of the good he did, and of that which he intended to do. It was he that firſt formed the plan of a perpetual peace, as we find in the records of thoſe times. The Abbé DE ST. PIERRE, revived that plan, and rendered it leſs complex. He did not adopt the project of introducing a kind of equality among the different powers of Europe, but formed his balance on the junction of ſeveral leſſer powers, as a counterpoiſe to the force and ambition of one mighty ſtate, and drew up five fundamental articles that were to form the baſis of a general plan of arbitration

But the ſigning of theſe articles conſidering the ambition of certain European powers, muſt meet with many difficulties, and therefore render his plan impracticable.

It was the ſcheme of the Abbé de St. Pierre to erect a general tribunal to terminate the differences that might ariſe between the European powers, a tribunal armed for that purpoſe, with power to place it beyond the reach of danger from any quarter, and a tribunal whoſe members, ſenſible of their own happineſs, and ſatisfied with their lot, ſhould conſecrate themſelves entirely to watch over the happineſs of others. I maintain that the kingdom of France is alone enabled to exerciſe the authority, and to perform the office of ſuch a tribunal, and cannot too ſoon enter upon this important function.

Such a ſtate as France, is qualified to pronounce a deciſive judgment upon the differences that may ariſe in Europe, ſince where power may be wanting, it can ſupply this defect by dexterity, prudence, uniformity of counſels and conduct, and perpetual negociations. This then is my propoſal, and I now proceed to ſhew that it is practicable.

During the ſpace of twenty years paſt, France has given abundant proof of its preferring the glory that ariſes from the character of an arbiter, before that which reſults from extending its conqueſts.

Whenever France ſhall think proper to procure for the reſt of Europe, the happineſs that ſhe enjoys *, ſhe will exert her force to reſtrain the ambitious, and to baffle their attempts, and ſhe will employ as much aſſiduity and application in this ſalutary work, as Lewis XI. Cardinal Richlieu and Lewis XIV. exerted in extending the limits of her dominion.

There are, at this day, four leading powers, to whoſe ambition it is neceſſary to ſet bounds, ſince their views and intereſts trouble the repoſe of Europe.

The firſt of theſe powers is the Houſe of Auſtria; we will turn againſt that ambitious houſe the arms of her own vaſſals, by ſhewing them that the advantages that are propoſed to them are deluſive; and by perſuading them, by the diſintereſtedneſs of our conduct, that we have no other view than to maintain the union of the Germanic body.

We will allow the Turks to execute their deſigns, and we will even give them aſſiſtance under-hand. We will ſow the ſeeds of diviſion between the houſe of Auſtria, the Czarina, and Great Britain. We will keep always a certain number of emiſſaries and ſpies, at the Ruſſian court. We will ſcatter ſeveral ſums of money in the North, where our bribes are always ſwallowed with avidity.

* This ſentence ſhews plainly, that Argenſon's book was compoſed before the late war.

We will find no difficulty in taking from the houſe of Auſtria a certain number of her hereditary provinces, in order to diſpoſe of them in favour of the houſes of Bavaria, Saxony, and Brandenburg, who form pretenſions to them.

It is certain that the houſe of Auſtria is more dangerous in Italy, than Don Carlos. The latter is, as it were, baniſhed to the very extremity of the continent. He ſtands in need of all the credit and protection of Spain, in order to give a proper degree of ſtrength and conſiſtence to his riſing dominion; and the ſlowneſs of the Spaniard, as well as his diſtance from the kingdom of Naples, will always render his ſuccours tardy. On the other hand, the Houſe of Auſtria is in poſſeſſion of the faireſt provinces in Italy, where it has eſtabliſhed a compleat deſpotiſm, and can introduce its troops at whatever time, and in whatever numbers, it ſhall judge expedient. The expulſion, therefore, of that houſe out of Italy, is a matter of more urgent neceſſity than the expulſion of Don Carlos; and we ought always to ſecond openly or ſecretly the attempts of any third power who ſhall endeavour to wreſt out of the hands of that family the whole or any part of its Italian dominions.

Ruſſia is the ſecond power; and I have already obſerved that we can eaſily regain our credit at that court, by our ſpies and our ſubſidies. Denmark is entirely devoted to England, ſince the Elector of Hanover is King of Great Britain. Denmark hires out its troops, and makes no longer a figure in Europe on its own account. Sweden has iron, a good military diſcipline, courage, a marine; and the power at preſent has changed ſides—the democracy reigns.

The third power is Spain; and we will diſconcert its chimerical and ambitious plans by an uniform, conſiſtent, and ſteady conduct. We will neither dread her anger, nor appear to be warmed and elated with her careſſes. We muſt always cheriſh a warm but ſecret attachment to that power; but we muſt be, at the ſame time, always careful to cover that attachment with an external and eaſy air of political coldneſs. Spain will always court our friendſhip, becauſe ſhe can never act but with us. She will be always ſure of the good offices of our miniſters, if they caſt, as will generally be the caſe, a greedy eye, and ſtretch out an itching palm towards the treaſures ſhe offers. We can fortify Portugal, and put it in an impregnable condition, ſo as even to render it a barrier againſt Spain, ſhould the latter attempt to renew the troubles of Europe; thus we may do with the utmoſt ſafety, ſince it is certain, that Portugal will never dream of making conqueſts in Spain, but has rather reaſon to fear ſome ſuch thing for itſelf, from that quarter.

Our ſeeming coldneſs towards Spain will be extremely pleaſing to the reſt of Europe, which fears no thing ſo much as our intimate union with that power. This union, however, we muſt carefully cultivate; but it muſt be modified by certain maxims: For example, we muſt protect, by our fleet, the Spaniſh ſettlements in America, and oppoſe by our army, the conqueſts of Spain in Europe.

The ultimate end of political ſcience ought to be the advancement of peace, and the removal of every incident that may tend to promote diſcord and diviſion.

The coalitions that are formed by marriages and ſucceſſions, are not leſs dangerous than the conqueſts that are made by force of arms. We can prepare ourſelves by proper precautions againſt the violent attempts of an ambitious invader; but we ſeldom perceive the miſchief that may reſult from acquiſitions procured by right of ſucceſſion until the miſchief is done. Theſe acquiſitions cauſe longer and bloodier wars, than almoſt any other circumſtance. [For an illuſtration of this obſervation of M. d'Argenſon's, our readers are deſired to caſt an eye on the FAMILY COMPACT.]

It were therefore to be wiſhed, that the limits of the different European ſtates were fixed in ſuch a manner as to prevent their undergoing any change, through treaty, or right of ſucceſſion.

The Houſe of Auſtria has acquired but little by the ſword; [vide, the hiſtory of the late war, between two empires and two kingdoms on the one ſide, and the marquis of Brandenburg, commonly called King of Pruſſia, on the other] all its grandeur is the reſult of marriage, hence that diſtich of a certain poet:

Bella gerant alii, felix Auſtria, nube;
Nam quæ Mars aliis, dat tibi regna Venus.

The fourth power is England, whoſe enormous and tyrannical commerce it is the intereſt of all Europe to diminiſh and reſtrain within certain bounds, ſince the progreſs it has already made is a proof that it will yet increaſe; nay, ſince this very progreſs will be the very cauſe of its farther advancement; for when power of any kind gets beyond the common pitch, it then not only ſupports itſelf, but makes, with facility, new acquiſitions of ſtrength and vigour. The beſt way of treating the Engliſh is to give them trouble at home, to introduce perplexity into their finances, and to hurt their public credit, that ſo they may be neither in a condition, nor at leiſure to carry on a war, or to diſturb the balance of power and the tranquility of Europe. But we muſt not blow the coals of civil diſcord in England, in ſuch manner as to put out the flame. For a nation reduced to extreme difficulties, reſumes ſtrength from its very weakneſs, when the view of peril unites its diſcordant members. Urgent neceſſity excites public ſpirit, particularly in Britain *; preſſing wants awaken and alarm it; then all parties unite, and notwithſtanding the load of debt that lies upon the public, opulent individuals furniſh powerful reſources in time of need.

England, therefore, muſt be attacked with the greateſt caution, if it be attacked in this way. And if we propoſe diminiſhing the commercial advantages and privileges, which that nation is poſſeſſed of, we muſt be well prepared and ready to protect thoſe nations, who will venture to diminiſh them.

To put a ſtop to their fraudulent trade with the Spaniſh colonies, we muſt prepare for a heavy maritime war in thoſe diſtant regions, and if theſe frauds were once prevented, the flouriſhing colonies of Britiſh America would become very inconſiderable.—For this purpoſe we muſt have a marine worthy of ſuch a kingdom as France is, ſituated between two ſeas, in a fertile and populous region.

It will perhaps be aſked, by way of objection to the plan here laid down, Who are to be the allies of France? I anſwer; ſhe will have none—She will have no particular nor fixed confederates—Europe will be her friend—Europe will be her dependent. [Well ſaid, Bombardinian!]

We muſt baniſh out of this plan all thoſe confederacies and aſſociations of different powers, that ſeem to be founded on friendſhip and affection. Theſe confederacies have mutual defence and public good for their pretext, but ambition is their principle, and invaſion is their purpoſe and vocation.

They, who examine things with due attention, will be perſuaded, that France, and almoſt all the conſiderable ſtates of Europe, are able to defend themſelves. It rarely comes into the head of one powerful ſovereign to attack another, merely with a view to diminiſh his influence, or to leſſen his dominions; [the Marquis had forgot the hiſtory of Louis XIV. and indeed all hiſtories, when he wrote this ſentence] the defenſive leagues therefore, that theſe powers form, are, at bottom, really offenſive.

Let us paſs in review the preſent ſtate of all the European powers, and we will find, that France is the only one, at this day, qualified to act the glorious part of an univerſal arbiter. She has no pretenſions,—She has no demands to anſwer—She has forces more than ſufficient for her own defence—Her reputation alone renders her reſpectable, and, when her troops move, formidable. (Vide the battles of Roſbach and Minden, the ſieges of Cape-Breton, Guadaloupe, Martinico, and Belle-Iſle, and all the laſt war.) She poſſeſſes the empire of taſte, and of the arts. (Vide William Vade's diſcourſe to the Welches.) With all theſe advantages, what laws can be expected from her, but laws of true wiſdom and ſound policy? This then is the true Univerſal Monarchy. To judge is to govern, and judgment pronounced according to equity, is the only empire that ſhould be exerciſed over men.

Bombalio, Clangor, Strider, Taratantara, Murmur.

* See for a proof of this the miniſtry of Mr. Pitt.

Extract of a letter from Ireland, ſhewing the true cauſes of the late riots and diſturbances by the natives in that kingdom, which have by ſome falſely been attributed to their diſaffection to the preſent government.

THE frequent riots we are ſeldom without in one part or other of this kingdom, do certainly merit the utmoſt attention of the legiſlature to put a ſtop to the progreſs of a ſpirit, that, wherever it has predominated, has always proved deſtructive to national happineſs, liberty and good government. Tho' much of this turbulent ſpirit may juſtly be attributed to the peculiar obſtinancy of the common people in general, yet there are many cauſes which evidently tend to ſtir up a riotous diſpoſition in the mob.—We are unhappily fallen into a way of raiſing great part of the public and civil revenue, by taxes on malt, beer, wine, and the eſſential neceſſaries of life—Engroſſers, alſo in theſe articles multiply daily. The courſe of juſtice is frequently ſtopped by the arbitrary proceedings of revenue officers, which are often winked at by falſely loyal magiſtrates, who, over zealous on the part of the crown, are but too little ſo on the part of the ſubject, for whoſe protection they were firſt inſtituted, and who, without examining into the cauſes of diſcontent, have too often recourſe to the writ, but of late, common cuſtom of ſuppreſſing, or rather ſtifling, the murmurs of the people by a military force, which only ſpreads the gangrene farther, inſtead of effecting a thorough cure.—All well-meaning people juſtly blame riotous doings which they ſee; but ſome well-meaning people do not enough conſider the pinchings of hunger which they do not feel. A body of troops may diſperſe rioters, and cauſe an outward face of quiet in the people, but this is not giving bread to the hungry, or covering the naked with a garment. It is a ſore grievance for one to want bread, and hear the piercing cries of ſtarving children. It is a grievance for another not to be paid his juſt wages, or be compelled to give more for the neceſſaries of life than their juſt value, through the combination and villainy of foreſtallers. It is a grievance to ſee our own manufacturers want bread, while foreigners are encouraged and employed; and it is a grievance to another to have his houſe pulled down and pillaged by a riotous mob: here then it is, that the wiſdom and goodneſs of a government ought to ſhew themſelves, and like a wiſe and loving parent of many children, by looking with the utmoſt integrity and care into the cauſes of diſcontent, make uſe of its authority to relieve the needy and oppreſſed, and remove all true grievances of the people; whether they are found to proceed from a neglect of thoſe at the helm to the true intereſt of the ſubject; the negligence of magiſtrates in executing the laws, oppreſſion of the poor by the rich; or, laſtly, from a ſpirit of licentiouſneſs and immorality diffuſed through the kingdom: above all, perhaps it would not be amiſs if the government was to practiſe a little ſelf-denial on this occaſion; that is, by leſſening the number of thoſe who are maintained by the public revenue, to take off by that means ſome of the moſt burthenſome taxes on the poor. Theſe would be ſuch lively inſtances of juſtice, wiſdom and goodneſs, as would charm every body on this ſide of the water, gain the love of the ſubjects, and render even the moſt diſaffected loyal."

CHARLES-TOWN, MARCH 2, 1765.

YESTERDAY arrived here in Capt. Rhinds, from New-York, several officers, and a number of privates of his Maj. ty's ninth regiment, on their way to St. Augustine.

We are informed, that a party of Cherokees, who went lately to hunt on the Missisippi, have lost five men, and 9 women and children, killed by a nation of savages hitherto unknown to them.

Judd's Friend, and the party he carried with him, to intercept some supplies that were said to be sending by the French to the Indians on the Missisippi, has done nothing more than bring two Frenchmen with him to Chocta, whom he found at Fort L'Assumption, on his return home, and intends to deliver to Mr. Price, the commanding officer at Ecabouee.

Musquito Harbour, in East Florida, has been surveyed and sounded, and found to be much preferable to that of St. Augustine. The soil there too is said to be much richer.

We hear, that in several parts of the country, the woods are full of dead foxes, who are carried off by a species of madness which has prevailed amongst them near two months past.

☞ Those who have any accompts against him, are desired to send them in, and they shall be paid.

TO BE SOLD very reasonable,

A TRACT of land, containing seven hundred and fifty acres, situated very pleasantly on Savannah river, within eight miles above the town, on the mouth of Augustine creek, joining the lands of Mr. Wylly, Augustus Cuthbert, Bulloch and Vaw Munch; the said land contains a large tract of swamp, and the rest is chiefly pine land, fit for sawing,—as the mouth of the creek is within the said land, it has a very great conveniency for building of mills of any kind. Also, A swamp of between four and five hundred acres, situated at the head of Vernon river, about six miles from Savannah, without Mr. Baker's barony, exceeding good for corn and indico, also some prime land. A sloop may load at the landing, and any vessel may come within two miles of it; the land is bounded on a creek on which a saw-mill is now erected. It has a house, barn, garden, and a great number of mulberry and fruit trees; about fifty acres are under a good fence, and it never yet wanted water in the driest season to make indico, the whole an exceeding healthy and pleasant situation.

Likewise one hundred acres in Purrysburg township, about three miles above the town, joining east on lands to which no owner appears, west on Savannah river, a large body of pine barren, supposed to be vacant, is contiguous, and it has the advantage of a bluff that never overflows. Also, One hundred and twenty-seven acres right opposite, exceeding rich land, with a convenient place for a settlement, and well stocked with oak and cypress. These two tracts to be sold together.

Whoever inclines to purchase may treat with Mr. John Hosden, in whose hands the plats are to be seen. 6—72.
